The Effect of Health Care Reform on Employers

Tuesday, Aug. 10, 2010 - 11 a.m. PT/2 p.m. ET

Now that the Affordable Care Act has become law, employers and their advisors face the task of learning what health care reform really means for employer health plans. Although the key elements of this reform (the individual mandate and the employer “free rider penalty”) do not take effect until 2014, a surprising number of provisions will become effective either later this year or by January of 2011. And while existing health plans are “grandfathered” from many of these new requirements, there is no grandfather protection for many others. In this webinar, we’ll focus on the (i) changes effective in 2011 (technically, plan years beginning on or after September 23), (ii) regulatory guidance that has been issued to date (i.e., grandfathered plan rules, dependent coverage, and lifetime and annual limits), and (iii) changes to be aware of that will take effect in later years.
